Twelve Nations Vote to Reject Proposal Setting up Political Functions

Several Countries See Taxes Touched by Effort to Reduce Tariff Barriers

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR HAVANA— Twelve American republics, including the larger countries—the United States, Mexico, Argentina, Brazil, and Chile—have voted against any present or future extension of political functions to the Pan-American Union, marking the definite failure of efforts to make the Pan-American Union a powerful force in the political life of the American continent.

The extent of the economic func-tions of the union is still uncertain, but the proposals of Honorio Pueyr-redon of Argentina for decisive dec-larations on this topic have not yet called forth a single sympathetic dec laration from other delegations.

The Pan-American Union, under the articles adopted, will continue its labors for intellectual, cultural and economic co-operation, the latter efforts thus far having been merely informative.

Shuts 'Out Politics

Enrique Olaya of Colombia voiced the ideal arguments for an effective political organization of the Pan-American Union, most of the others concern lest the union might some-now become a disadvantageous po-

The countries that rejected the roposal by Señor Varela that the nion might have political functions by the unanimous consent of the states which are members were Peru, Ecuador, Mexico, Salvador, Nicaragua, Venezuela, Chile, Brazil, Argentina, Haiti, Dominican Republic and the United States. Countries absent were Honduras, Panama and Bolivia.

The visits of teams from other parts of the continent and from South America have stimulated the sport manzingly, and it is as common a sight to see Spanish children ticking a small football about the alleys and byways and country fields as it is to see the same thing in England.

While it cannot be said that the bullfight in Spain is not still popular, there is every reason to believe that another generation will see it on the wane. Indeed, for a decade this brutal exhibition has endured more as a colorful spectacle than because the Spaniard of today sees anything of "sport" in it. It would be ungracious, and inaccurate as well, to suggest that the younger generation of Spanish is less appreciative of clean sport than that of any other continental people. Thus the Franch desire for a revival of the famous Geneva Protocol which constituted a general security pact is dismissed in the present stage of international relations. The British view prevails. Yet the French as an alternative have accepted a system of regional accords and in practice have entered into them and encouraged them. They are indeed the chief exponents of the regional pact idea. Thus it is held that the French policy of regional understandings has also triumphed.

Definite Machinery Advocated
In any case it is not by insisting on League intervention everywhere and the automatic application of sanctions that progress will be made according to French interpretation though Dr. Benes would have definite machinery for the application of such measures as the League may find practicable. Pertinax points out that disarmament depends on the possibility of obtaining new guarantees, since those contained in the Covenant of the League are judged insufficient by central and eastern countries. Mr. Politis had to consider new guaran-tees, Mr. Rutgers had to consider the effective employment of the existing guarantees, and adoption of interna-tional arbitration had to be considred. How could the guarantees increased when many members of the League scarcely accept the obligations that they already have under the Covenant. That is the crux of the matter and it is obvious that there is not a true agreement in sight. While one part of Europe wants more security, another part of Europe de-clines to commit itself to furnish further assistance. Naturally Prague reporters have taken an optimistic view, but it is unlikely that the various nations will consent to a general alienation of their sovereignty.

Pacts of Locarine Type That is why the committee falls back upon limited pacts of the Lo-carno type. Great Britain though notement, nevertheless was willing to give a specific guarantee in a particular region and it is felt that other countries will give guarantees in regions that interest them most. Moreover in these pacts recourse to arms should be renounced and demilitarized zones should be established.

Nevertheless though prog-ress may be made on these lines, it is well to recall that the task is it is well to recall that the task is formidable, that Germany and Hungary for example must be persuaded to enter into a center European pact, that Russia must enter the Baltic pact and that Bulgaria must be included in the Balkanic pact. These things will not be accomplished tomorrow. It is doubted here whether the time is ripe to proceed with the disarmament conference for which Germany and Russia are impatient. KING CALLS ON MR. RADITCH TO FORM CABINET

Croat Leader Fails, Mr. Davidovitch Refuses -Peritch May Be Sent For

BELGRADE — Stephan Raditch the leader of the Croat Peasant Party, so long regarded as a rebel and dangerous insurgent, for the first time since the formation of the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, was invited by the King to become Prime Minister. He endeavored to form a coalition ministry and falled. Mr. Raditch returned his mandate to the King, whereupon Leubs Davidovitch, the veteran leader of the Democratic Party, was summoned to attempt to compose a government. This was almost a foregone conclusion when Mr. Davidovitch's followers in the Skupshtina voted almost by two to one in favor of his taking the helm of a coalition ministry.

Mr. Davidovitch's followers in the Skupshtina voted almost by two to one in favor of his taking the helm of a coalition ministry.

Mr. Davidovitch is not only the most popular and straightforward politician, but he is regarded as able to reconcile racial and social groups. Mr. Davidovitch, however, much to the surprise of his followers, decilined the King's mandate, foreseeing certain failure owing to the insistence of the Radicals, the strongest party in the Skupshtina, on having the Premiership:

Mr. Roberts considered that the whole survival of good descriptive writers, possessing the flair for the whimsical, for humor in good taste, for the quality of charmingly turning a phrase, was pre-eminently dependent upon such work being well paid. He pointed to the fact that the magazine field is wider and more promising than ever. That good reporters need less to continue at the daily grind of newspaper work now except for preference than ever, because there are now too many magazine connections in which a man may remain satisfyingly a reporter yet be removed from the city room.

He thought, if there were men to do the work George Ade, Brand Whitlock and Peter Dunne were doing when they contributed good English and brilliant thought to the Chicago press, newspapers would have some difficulty in holding them. But he found it quite impossible to foresee a day in the history of contemporary newspapers when columns would be filled with bare news dispatches and there would be no available descriptive writers, for stories, perchance of lighter intrinsic worth, men who could decorate their material with the humorous or whimsical or fabulous, seeing beyond immediate fact prisms of color which, in some degree, continually glow

In bestowing the decoration, the President said:

"The Republic of Cuba established the order of Manuel de Cespedes to honor men who have distinguished themselves above others in this and other countries. You are one of them, doing more good to humanity by a mission of peace and civilization. My country's Government honors itself by honoring you with the highest decoration we can grant.

Colonel Lindbergh replied briefly, expressing his thanks for his reception in Havana. He said he hoped his work would aid the peoples in the establishment of rapid communication by the development of aviation.

With Catherine and Ann Judah, 4½-year-old twin daughters of Ambassador and Mrs. Nobel Judah as passengers, he made a flight over Havana and surrounding districts in a commercial plane. The Ambassador and Mrs. Judah also flew with him.

Before this flight he received the keys of the city of Havana at the pavilion erected in the Prado, Havana's famous parkway, which was thronged with enthusiastic crowds. Mayor Gomez made the presentation. An hour before the ceremony of the keys, Colonel Lindbergh had received the gold medal of the Havana Province. On the second trip he took Mayor Gomez, four civic officials and their wives.

THIS phrase, "Toreign affairs," is becoming a misnomer. With the ease and speed of modern travel and the celerity of modern communication, nations are becoming neighbors—some, perhaps, less neighborly than others—and their affairs which once might have been foreign to each other are becoming a common concern to all. The present week has brought a diversity of developments which affect the status of international relations. They are, moreover, tangible developments and prophetic of increasingly stable and congenial relations.

The week started with the signing of the new Franco-American arbitration treaty, and a more auspicious start there could hardly be. The treaty extends the scope of agreed arbitration, and in its preamble avows the desire of the two nations to eachew war of all kinds. The treaty strengthens the firm foundation of a lasting Franco-American peace.

Franco-American peace.

In opening the British Parliament a few days later, King George took the timely opportunity to announce that his Government is sympathetically studying a new draft treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States—a study which will be as sympathetically undertaken on the American side of the Atlantic. The United States is also to provide a similar treaty with Japan.

is also to negotiate a similar treaty with Japan.

At this same time a resolution is being favorably discussed in the House of Representatives in Washington looking forward to the negotiation of an agreement by all nations to abolish the use of submarines and discontinue their construction. The project has the outspoken approval of Secretary Kellogg, and has been welcomed in Downing Street.

Coincidentally Senator Gillett has introduced into the Senate a resolution calling mean the President to recover conversations with a Coincidentally Senator Gillett has introduced into the Senate a resolution calling upon the President to reopen conversations with a view toward reaching an agreement whereby the United States may join the Permanent Court of International Justice. All but a part of one of the American reservations were accepted by the World Court members, who at the time asked the United States to clarify its desires. It is the purpose of the Gillett resolution to serve that end.

ToT long ago the United States Department of the Navy was receiving some criticism from within its own ranks, considerable being said that it was overstaffed and not too efficiently administered. Germany, too, apparently has its own Magruder. Come reports that the present small German navy is maintaining four time as many officials in Berlin as the vast pre-war navy, and that the costs of upkeep are disproportionately high. The German people are practicing a courageous economy in private life, and they are calling for it in public life as well.

ROM the pen of Mussolini has come a document of immediate concern to virtually every nation in the world. The explanatory news dispatches have not been sufficiently detailed to give the full meaning of the pronouncement, or to make extensive comment possible. It merits examination for its potential significance.

"A world-wide organization of Fascism is outlined in a new constitution for Fascists abroad which has been issued by Fremier Mussolini. By this constitution Italians resident in other countries swear allegiance to the Fascist régime, receive membership cards of the organization, and receive directions from consuls abroad as the direct representatives of the Fascisti."

The implications of such a program are many,

although not fully measurable until the program has been put into operation. Most natious, it is part of the political and social fabric of the nation. The new Pascistic constitution provides that resident Italians shall not take part in the internal political life of the country.

Again, the constitution provides that Fascists abroad shall swear allegiance to Fascismo and obedience to their Italian representatives—practices which many nations might find not conducive to their efforts to assimilate their foreign-born. Throughout its provisions, it is made clear, however, that they are not intended to run counter to the laws of the land in which Fascists reside, all Fascists being admonished to respect the laws and to live uprightly in public and private life.

A world order of Fascism offers a fascinating project. Its course and the means which its advocates take to foster it, are likely to interest the press and public everywhere.

URING the week the Pan-American Congress has come to grips with two of its thorniest problems. One is to reconcile all views on what should be contained in the preamble of the new constitution for the Pan-American Union. In particular, Argentina, is proposing, and the United States opposing, a declaration for economic unification of the Americas through reduction of tariffs. The other issue, which arises from the effort to agree on a code of international law, is whether inter-The United America says no, and the delegates at Havana are seeking some common ground. come not to interpret his country to Canada, but to be able to interpret Canada to Great Britain. Since that happy occasion, many developments have passed across the front pages of the press to indicate that a new Canada is arresting world attention.

Canada's exchange of ministers with the United States has been followed by the recent announcement that a similar diplomatic status is soon to prevail with both France and Japan. And Premier King's neighborly call at Washington this winter was this week returned by Secretary Kellogg. Canada is becoming nationally strong and internationally active.

Canadian progress, politically and economically, has been surpassing. At the beginning of the twentieth century Canada sheltered a undeveloped if not unpromising territory. A quarter of a century has added 3,000,000 to Canada's peoples. Last year its per capita wealth of $2406 was second only to that of the United States and Great Britain, while its per capita trade balance was unexcelled. The Liberal Government has achieved political stability, the people economic strength.

From Great Britain, Canada has received autonomy in international affairs as well as domestic, and it is to the credit of British colonial statesmanship that Canada, for all its sovereignty, is if anything a more loyal and co-operative member of the British Commonwealth of Nations. More and more will Canada be a force in world affairs. She sits as an equal upon the Council of the League of Nations as well as at the British Imperial Conference.

As a nation Canada is devoted to the arts of peace. Secretary Kellogg's visit to Ottawa gives renewed and mutual assurance that 4000 miles of friendship join the two countries.

NEW YORK-Commercial aviation sion by the House, somewhat

NEW YORK—Commercial aviation in the United States will be definitely established this year according to A. H. G. Fokker, airplane builder, who has just returned here on the Berengaria, of the Cunard Line, from a visit home in Holland and from a survey of aviation in Europe.

"The difference between the development of aviation in the United States and Europe," he said, "is that in Europe aviation has been artificially maintained through subsidies, while in the United States the companies operating without subsidies, while in the United States the companies operating without subsidies have had a natural development. In the United States, with long distances to be covered, the value of air service to the public will be much greater than is possible in any part of Europe."

Sion by the House, somewhat amended, was approved by all members of the Finance Committee with the exception of William H. King (D.), Senator from Utah.

Leaders of all sides in the Senate indicated their acceptance of the measure as revised by the committee and expressed a desire to complete action on the bill at an early date. A conference will then be held by Congress and the differences adjusted.

The noted American amateur, Don Wallace, presents herewith what may be considered the general opinion of the 17,000 amateurs in this country. The amateurs were originally given the short waves because they were thought uscless. Within a few years they have developed them until we now see a contest being waged betteeen the big interests for the radio gold mine these youngsters uncovered. Naturally, the amateurs feel they have a prior claim to these frequencies, and the curtailment of their privileges to hardly causing any wild enthusianm on their part.

SYNCHRONIZED CHAIN SEEN AS NOT FEASIBLE

N. B. C. Survey States Plan Has Possibilities but Not at Present Stage of Art

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11-The im practicability of synchronizing chain radiocasting stations has been pointed out to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce by Merle H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company. His statement, represented to report the conclusions of the engineering staff of the N. B. C., was the first to be issued from the chain radiocastors themselves anent the proposal to place chain stations on the same wavelength and synchronize their All-American music and talent will

Such a plan is "possible in the sense that it is imaginable," the N. B. C. engineers will only admit, adding, "But it is not known whether it is feasible either technically from the program administration point of view or as an economically toler-able system." Following is the state-ment read into the record by Presi-dent Aylesworth:

An examination of single frequency operation of a network of radiocasting stations shows that the following physical facilities are required:

Each network station must have Each network station must have a master-oscillator-controlled transmitter, which is a very modern type of transmitter used in only a small percentage of the American stations. It is an expensive transmitter as well and not particularly easy to construct or to handle except when built by the country comprehent manbuilt by thoroughly competent manunfacturing organizations.

If a station is on a network and also sends out local non-network programs, it will require two frequencies, namely: one for its local programs and one for its network programs. Consequently, it will be programs. Consequently, it will be required to have a transmitter which can change rapidly and very accu-rately from the local frequency to the network frequency and back again. Such a transmitter is almost as elaborate and expensive as two separate transmitters in the radio-frequency portion thereof.

If the station happens to give the programs of two networks (as is the case of the southern group of sta-tions) it would be necessary for such a station to have a frequency for each network and for its local programs. A triple transmitter or its electrical and mechanical equivalent would therefore be required for such stations. Such a requirement at this time would be neither technically justifiable nor economically feasible. In order that all stations on an extended network shall operate on the same frequency, it is necessary that there shall be established between them a high quality wire or radio connection to carry this frequency or a sub-multiple of this each network and for its local pro frequency. This means that the entire broadcasting network must be duplicated, in electrical effect, by a second network carrying the master frequency. At each station there must be means for changing this master frequency (which will be a sub-multiple of the actual station network frequency) to the network frequency. Such a device is called a "harmonic amplifier" and is not the simplest or least expensive thing in the world.

Network broadcasting which brings the finest programs available to remote points cannot at this time carry the cost of duplicate connections to each station, one for the program, and one for the synchronizing frequency.

When network stations operate on the same frequency, there will still be cross-talk or interferences between the individual station announcements during the stand-by period. If this is to be avoided, all station announcements of the individual station must be eliminated nouncements during the stand-by period. If this is to be avoided, all station announcements of the individual station must be eliminated which, in turn, means a certain loss of station identity, which is not fair to impose upon the radiocaster except with his consent.

The effect on the listeners would be somewhat confusing if their local station used two or three wavelengths depending upon its network or local program operation. Rapid changes in tuning by the listeners will be required.

It is not yet technically known whether a network of stations operating on the same frequency would give better service to rural listeners than is now the case or worse service. Only experimentation can determine the state of the state of than is now the case or worse service. Only experimentation can determine this vital point.

In summary, network broadcasting on a single frequency requires elaborate and expensive changes in transmitter equipment, greatly added network wire or radio facilities, unusually skilled station operation, complicated program and network administration, inconvenience to large groups of listeners, and perhaps poorer service to large groups of rural listeners.

Our engineering policy is to study and experiment with this type of operation and to endeavor so to simplify it that the preceding objections may be at least in part overcome. On the other hand, single frequency operation of network stations today is premature, burdensome and unproven, either technically or economically.

time in the history of the Nation, a branch of Congress has gone on record as opposed to more than two terms of office for a President.

In 1875 the House, by the overwhelming vote of 234 to 18, adopted a resolution declaring it was the "sense of the House" that a departure from the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents in retiring from the presidential office after the second term would be "unwise, unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our free insti-

Voting for this declaration at that time were such historic personages as Garfield, who later became President; Hoar, Frye, Hale.

The immediate cause of the introduction of the resolution was the activity on the part of certain of the elected, his tenure in office would WASHINGTON—For the second constitute a third term was the subterm resolution. Administration adherents, opposing the resolution maintained it would not, on the ground that he was now filling only his first elective term as President. Proponents of the resolution took the position that terms of office as President should be counted by oaths of office as President, and not by the number of times the President is elected to the office.

The resolution passed by the Sen-ate was offered by Robert M. La Follette (R.), Senator from Wisconsin, for the first time on Feb. 22, 1927. It was referred to a com-mittee and lapsed with the ending of the Sixty-ninth Congress. At that time it was widely accepted in political quarters that President Coolidge would be a candidate to succeed himself. La Follette Resolution

The resolution was introduced by Mr. La Follette after the Democrats had hesitated doing so, as part of the campaign to prevent the renomi-nation of Mr. Coolidge. By the equally emphatic vote of 56 to 26 the Senate has now placed itself on record on the issue in practically flet same words that the House took its stand more than half a century ago. As in 1875 a possible third-term candidacy was the cause of the action of the House, so the resolution now concurred in by the Senate was precipitated by the possibility of a "third" term for President Coolidge.

The question as to whether, if Mr. Coolidge was renominated and re-

This was strenuously objected to by Administration supporters on the ground it was an implied rebuke to the President. Mr. La Follette emphaticallly denied this. The controversy on the question ran the gamut of political chiding and baiting. Supporters of the resolution charged Administration Senators with imputing unworthy motives to the President of the resident of the President of the senators with imputing unworthy motives to the President of the second of the president of the second of the secon

Music News of the World

Russian Composers of Today

By VICTOR BELAIMY

Moscow

The pre-war era witnessed an increase in the attention phid to Russian music by western Burbope and America. This was due in the first place to Frans Lisst, who, almost as soon as the young Russian school arose, supported it with his immense artistic authority. After him the foremest propagandists of Russian music abroad were Mitrofan Petrovich Belaiev, publisher and Mmceans; Berge Koussevitaky, also a publisher, and famous the world over as a conductor; and the no less celebrated Serge Diaghilev, organizer of Russian concerts and operatic performances in foreign countries, and director of the world-renowned Russian Ballet. All these names are directly connected with what might be called "specifically Russian" music, i. e., music which has a distinctly national flavor and has captivated the fancy of music-lovers of both continents by its tonal richness, its flights of imagination, its exquisite Oriental coloring.

Won Favor in West including Cabriel Popov, born in 1904, has profoundly interested Moscow during the current season by his Septet, Op. 5, for flute, clarinet, bassoon, trumped, violin, cello and double-bass; this work was performed at one of the Contents of the "latest" Leningrad school, Popov reveals in the Beptet the influences of Btravin-sky and Prokofiev, as well as of his western contemporaries; they are seen in the aspiration to revive the contrapuntal and chamber concert style of the days of Bach and Mozart, and in the introduction into his music of the current European and American dance rhythms. All these influences undergo a very original and peculiar transformation in Popov's compositions, testifying to the power of his talent, from which great things may be expected.

Shostakevich

Among other new Leningrad composers who are known beyond the confines of their native city mention must be made of Dmitry Shostak-vich vick was performed at one of the Contents. A composer of the days of Bach and Mozart, and in the introduction into his music of the current European and American dance rh must be made of Dmitry Shostak-ovich, who recently made his debut this interest was not restricted to the most eminent phenomena in Russian music, but was also extended to those of less importance. Provided he preserved the Russian style and coloring, the Russian composer was sure of attracting the notice of foreign musicians, even though his work were distinctly stereotyped and displayed little originality in its methods.

This may be said to have been the case with the musical masses. But so far as many prominent composers of western Europe are concerned (they include first of all Debussy and Ravel, and in more recent times Manuel de Palls, Alfredo Casella and some others) the foremost places among Russian composers has always been assigned to Moussorgsky, as the real founder of the new era in the world's musical genius.

Moussorgsky's advancement into the foreground was immediately followed.

as the real founder of the new era in the world's music and an exceptionally original musical genius.

Moussorgsky's advancement into the foreground was immediately followed by that of two younger Russian composers. Stravinsky and Prokofiev, who began their careers in the period directly prior to the war. The former is now the reputed guide and leader of the contemporary musical progress of the world: in foreign countries the names of Moussorgsky and Stravinsky are regarded as determining on the one hand the essential nature and on the other the crowning achievement of modern Russian—or, speaking more broadly—Eastern European music.

The Newer Composers

At a first glance it may therefore seem that, on the whole, there have been no essential changes of late in the musical life of Russia as compared with pre-war times. But, as a matter of fact, it is not so. Changes there have been, and very profound changes, which have altered the relations between Moscow and Leningrad. Musical Petersburg of bygone times was nationalistic; it has now become the "internationalistic" Leningrad. Moscow, formerly the bulwark of "eclecticism" and "Europeanism" in Russian music, is now the defender, if not of national Russian musical ideas in the ordinary

Chamber Style The pianoforte concerto shows him to be the first Moscow composer to cultivate the chamber concert style, which he does in a highly young woman with hair like fiame original manner. In this respect he appears to be an exception to the generality of Moscow composers. The planoforte concerto shows geneous resonance of the pianoforte or the string quartet to the ensembles

Scriabin's influence on modern Moscow composers is reflected in the extreme "complexity" of their music, thanks to which it has become, in Milhaud's opinion, too difficult for contemporary reception. In his remarks he emphasises the difference musical tendencies of Leningrad and Moscow, and the remainder of this article will be devoted to an exposition of those tendencies.

I have already characterised in a few words the work of Myaskovsky, as the representative of romanticism in the symphonic section of modern Russian music. To this I must add that he is head of the Moscow school of young composers, most of whom are his pupils; among them I would mention in the first place Vissarion Sheblain and Aleksandr Mosolov. The former may be described as a very faithful follower of his teacher and a composer inclined to cultivate "national" Russian tendencies in his music.

As for Mosolov—whose Suite from THE word "music" has as many different meanings as there are varieties of music lovers. One has evidently no chance of making oneself understood by a large number of people when one uses it. It is then only to an unknown group of readers that I can hope to make intelligible the essential quality of "La Tour de Feu," the new work by

One knows the robust character and sincere pathos of the author of "La Lépreuse," a musician who found the way to be individual with-out inventing a single word of his vocabulary and who always remains essentially human. He expresses himself here with exceptional force. Specially interesting it is to find that American poets are turning, not to heroes and giants of the past, but their own American leaders. And these leaders it is Abraham Linoln who is most widely recognized-Lincoln, indigenous to the soil, even as Lowell pointed out in his Com-memoration Ode:

The mysteries that are untold, Our children shall behold his fame. The kindly-earnest, brave, forseeing man, clous, patient, dreading praise, not blame, birth of our new soil, the first American.

Of Lincoln's contemporaries, who made poetry about him, Whitman is bably the most noteworthy. Everyne is familiar with his lines "Capain, my Captain"; and even more beautiful "When Lilacs Last in the oryard Bloomed," with its exquialte tribute at the close:

In a few hours came "the sea son's difference." The scene-shifter worked with almost magical haste with silence, and with supreme effect. The gloomy days and nights of misty hill-tops and damp hollows, where the grass was sodden A bronzed, lank man! His suit of and the air dull and irresponsive to sound, gave way to bright sunshine, cloudless skies, calm seas, echoing hills, and the tinge of that which for lack of the ideal word we call "spring." Spring does not visit the tropical coast, where vegetation does not tolerate any period of rest. When plants are not actually romp ing with excess of vital force, as during the height of the wet season, they grow with the haste of summer. And yet immediately on the dispersal of the mists of July the least observance could not fail to recognize that a certain and elab orate change had taken place. The mango-trees had been flowering for several weeks in a trivial, halfhearted way, but when the sun sent its thrills down into the moist soil the lemons and pomeloes began to sweeten the air; the sunflower tree displayed its golden crowns among huge soft leaves, and the last blooms of belated wattles fell, showing that it is possible for tributes represent-ative of May and September to be

THROUGHOUT Jewish and Christian history the custom of song in religious services has been attended with joy and gladness, wherever the influence of the Scriptures has been sincerely accepted. As the Jewish people grew in the understanding of God, they sang with gladness of heart. Nature, in her own gardens, uses rines lavishly. By their use she succeeds in covering any bare, unsightly objects that occur is her domain. In the woods one usually finds bowlders and dead trees prettily festooned with Virginia creeper and wild grape. On any land boasting the least bit of fertility, man-made stone walls and fences form supports for various wild vines.

Vines are used comparatively seldom in gardens and dooryards, but anyone who observes can see, on nearly every place, one instance where the use of a proper vine would greatly have improved the appearance of the house or garden. Aside from the ever-present rambler rose one sees very few vines in use. Vines are invaluable for two purposes at least. Nothing else can be used on pergolas, and for screens vines lend themselves more readily to the training required than do shrubs. Whereas a shrub generally grows in straight lines, and cannot, without difficulty, be deviated from its natural course, a vine may be trained in any direction and be made to give a screen of foliage where most needed.

Hall's honeysuckle, lonicera Japon ica var. Halliana, was introduced to the United States some years ago, but has been little appreciated, con-sidering its many good points. This vine, in appearance, is much like the common woodbine, but is much hardler and more floriferous. It tries very hard to be evergreen, even in the north, managing as it does to retain its foliage until late December. The main crop of flowers, which are white, becoming yellow, comes in early June, and is followed by scattered bloom until after frost.

Hall's honeysuckle, though worth growing for its fragrance alone, can be put to many uses. Grown on wires or lattice-work, it forms an ideal screen or background for the garden. As it will stand shearing with impunity, it will make a very trim, hedgelike growth on lattice. In this manner the vine could be grown as a small hedge. Dry banks, always a problem when it comes to planting, may be covered in one year by the use of this hardy vine.

If one is looking for variety in honeysuckles, there are several good and rather uncommon species to be had. The coral honeysuckle, lonicera sempervirens, though not evergreen as its name suggests, in the north, is a beautiful native species. From April till August, each stem carries a cluster of large tubular flowers, yellow-tipped and at times shaded with scarlet. This species lacks the fragrance of the other honeysuckles, but makes up for it by its color. The Belgian woodbine, lonicera pericly-menum var. Belgica, bears its reddish, deliciously fragrant blooms throughout the summer. This is a hardy species, and will be greatly appreciated if grown near the house, where its fragrance will be enjoyed most fully. The old-fashioned gold-laced honeysuckle, Lonicera japonica var. aureo-reticulata, bears few flow-ers, but its small, deep green leaves, netted and edged with golden-yellow are very effective.

will give effective bloom at a time when the latter are out of bloom. The wistarias, properly trained, are very beautiful on pergolas. Their growth being slow, it is wise to plant a more rapid-growing vine with them, which may be removed when the wistarias have reached their maturity. The long racemes of lavender or white pealike flowers of the wistaria hardly need mention, being known and appreciated by all who have or are interested in gardens.

The trumpet vine, tecoma radicans, is a gorgeous thing when fiaunting its large orange flowers. These appear during August, when bloom on the woody plants is not common. The trumpets are robust and will require strong support. Like the wistaria, the trumpet vine may be trained on a pole, and in time will acquire a trunk of sufficient strength to support itself in a tree-like man-

For persons occupying rented places, who do not wish to plant for permanent effect, there are the annual vines to be considered. The sides of the pergola may be covered with smaller vines, trained on the trunks of the larger.

the rose-embowered home sells for the highest price. I venture to say, without having figured it out pre-cisely, that successfully reared roses properly placed about a city, or suburban, or country home can add not less than 10 times their cost in salable value to the property they adorn. To make this suggestion understandable, let any reader consider the comparison between the house without roses and the house with an abundance of roses properly placed, as climbers or pillars, or on the fence, or as a dividing hedge along the service road, or in orderly beds in the garden, or as incidents in the border. I have heard com-plaints made that when one trained a rose over the end of a frame house it made that house harder to paint. So it does, but the roses also tend to preserve the paint from the wear tomorrow's garden.

It keeps a lively interest in one's garden to try some experiment each year. For those in northern countries, now is the time to make a selection of seeds which are to be sown in flats or pots to get an early start and prolong the blooming season. In making such a selection let us add which we have never had before, perhaps have never seen. The seed catalogue is sure to give departicularly interested in fruit-scriptions of many such plants, and glowing descriptions too. I have read some of these which made me feel lack of space. some of these which made me feel that my garden would surely be a failure if I did not have this most unusual and lovely plant. Sometimes the result has exceeded the anticipation and sometimes the beauty of my garden has not been at all enhanced by the stranger I have introduced to it, but always the experiment has been illuminating and always the lesson learned has been of value whatever the result.

These essays are often so splendid that they are eagerly accepted by publications that deal with such subjects. A box luncheon is always the rule, the members bringing their own luncheon and the hostess furnishing only the liquid refreshment. Any stepping over the boundary of this rule on the part of an especially gracious hostess is much frowned upon by all the members, and so the matter of entertaining the club is never a burden but always a pleasure.

William Adams of Greengates,

william Adams was not only a painstaking student, but a real research worker along classical lines. When in the potting business for himself, he followed the art of the Romans more closely than that of the Grecians, to which Wedgwood was inclined. He was also an artist and an original designer.

Has His Own Factory at 42 In 1787 he set up a small factory of his own in Burslem, but soon built the large works at Greengates, Turnstall, where he designated himself as "William Adams of Greengates," In a short time his business increased, and needing more room he acquired another factory called Newfield, situated near Greengates. This was a place where only one pottery had ever existed, and that a small one started by Enoch Booth in the year 1750.

When we realised that we must lay $115 in the owner's hand to call them ours it seemed a sardonic bit of humor that a century ago rows on a dresser shelf meant that the mistress could afford nothing better. We left the platters but we bought a "poanet" or wee porringer of lustrous Quaker gray to hang beside the large one that great-uncle Isaiah had used for his breakfast porridge, and mate for the little stray from Vermont for which we had joyously traded an imposing cut glass water pitcher. That made three porringers in a row. like the big and middle-sized and wee bowls of Goldlick's Three Bears.

The Blown Glass Lamp
Behind the battlements of brass and iron candlesticks a glass lamp blinked at us. It was seven incheshigh with the same crudely molded design of roses that we had seen on pickle jars in this section. The heavy glass had a tinge of color like ashes-of-roses or palest violet, like the tiny grapes on Chelsea plates.

Adams's Violet Blue Is Famous
One particular color used for a background on his jasper ware was a peculiar, rich shade of violet. This is unusual and not found in any other potter's work. Of this color is the bowl in the illustration. He produced numerous differing shades in his color, but this violet blue has been affectionately termed "Adams blue."

His stoneware (jasper) was not glazed—except when he used colored bands at the neck of a piece. Nevertheless, the inside of his pieces is often found richly glazed. Wedgwood's, John Turner's, and William Adams's jasper were somewhat isimilar in texture, but each maker used a different formula.

Adams's figure modeling was extremely clear cut, and naturally some of his work is hard to distinguish from that of Wedgwood. Among his "sprigged" decorations on jasper ware are the following, quite unlike those of Wedgwood, his subjects being in most cases entirely original in conception of design:

Louis XV Venetian Arm Chairs

In the Original Paint

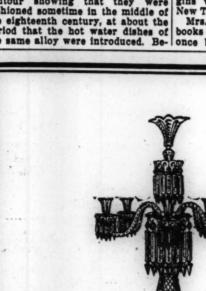

"The Italian tendency toward more exaggerated curves and a profuse use of carved ornament," in the interpretation of the Louis XV style, is admirably illustrated in these ten white and gold Venetian chairs. The carving is bolder, more sculptural, the backs are higher, the curves of the arm consoles and the cabriole legs more sweeping than in French chairs of the same style.

Nothing could well be finer than the salient leaf cresting of the backs, the rich ornament of the aprons below the seats, more thoroughly in the splendid decorative spirit of the place and age. Au Quatrieme has covered the slip seats and backs of these fine chairs with a very beautiful blue and jonquil yellow damask of the period.

TILDEN'S PLEA BEFORE U.S.L.T.A.

Would Send Two Juniors to Europe for Conditioning Before Cup Finals

the United States Lawn Tennis Association today.

Two sets of Davis Cup players are proposed in Tilden's plan, one to compete in the American sone play, under the recent decision of the U.S. L. T. A. and the other to sail for Europe early in the summer in order to get accustomed to foreign conditions for the finals in France.

"To send the United States team over in June for the cup matches in July," Tilden said, "only would court certain detest. Above all, develop the younger stars by sending over at least two juniors to gain experience in integnational play, whether or not they compete for the Davis Cup.

"Francis Hunter and I found last year that training conditions in Europe are entirely different than in America and we had been competing for at least six weeks before we reached top form."

Tilden's plan is to have George M. Lott Jr., John F. Hennessey and other young stars carry the burden of the American competition, while he and Hunter are getting acclimated in France. In that way he and Hunter, with the assistance of some of the younger players, may be able to lift the cup from France. He and Hunter also are willing to compete in the American zone while Lott, Hennessey and others are sent abroad to get in condition.

Tilden scored a victory Friday night over Lott which showed the brilliant service of the Tilden of old. Lott could do virtually nothing with Tilden's cannonball service, losing 6—3, 6—1. Hunter showed the same superiority over Hennessey, winning 6—3, 5—2. Tilden and Hunter, the United States loubles titleholders, gave the western roungsters, Lott and Hennessey, a lescen in doubles, 6—2, 6—2, before a sacked throng.

One of the most important and exciting games of the local Canadian-American Hockey League schedule tonight at the New Boston Arena when the Providence Reds invade to play the Boston Tigers. The two teams met Wednesday in Providence and played 70 minutes to a scoreless tie.

This game has a decided bearing on the race for playoff rights, for a victory for the Tigers, now leading the league, will make the locals practically certain of a place, while the Reds are staging a great rally to overtake both Springfield and Boston in the standing.

Last year the Reds put Boston out of the playoff by defeating the locals six games out of eight played during the season; but so far this season the Tigers have won 3, tied 1 and lost 1 in five games played with the visitors. The locals are handicapped with Reginald Mackey, defense man and Erben Shuts, right wing, out of action but under Manager Edward J. BASKETBALL FREE THROW RULES OUT

An added event will be held this year, it being for intermediate girls. This makes three individual events for boys and the same number for girls. There are also team championships in each division. THE acquisition of J. E. Cooney by the Beston Braves is a piece of good fortune—that is, from a Boston view—point. The Braves were not considered weak either at shortstop or at third base with E. S. Farrell and A. A. High to fill those positions, but with Cooney at shortstop, Farrell at third and Rogers Hornsby at second the Braves will have one of the strongest infield trios in the league. German Runner Loses to

at I. A. C. Games

Special Prom Monitor Burrat

CHICAGO—In the feature race of the eleventh annual indoor handicap track and field games of the Illinois Athletic Club, R. M. Conger of the I. A. C. defeated Dr. Otto Peltzer of Germany at 1000 meters, surprising a capacity crowd of 3500 at the Chicago Riding Club here last night, Conger, the National A. A. U. one-mile champion outdoors, finished with a remarkable sprint. It started on the back stretch of the last lap, brought him from third position to first, and he increased his speed, rounding out of the last turn to finish with a good 10-yard margin.

It appeared that the German ran well within his powers even up to the last half lap. He had set the pace for two laps with R. B. Dodge of the I. A. C. second. When Conger started his great sprint, however, he ran wide and Peltzer saw him too late. His efforts to pick up the yardage Conger had seised by surprise were fruitless and he did well to keep shead of Dodge to the finish. Leonard Larrivee of the Chicago Athletic Association, was fourth. The time of 2m. 37s. was slow because of the condition of the track.

Conger proved last night that he was without doubt Peltzer's superior for the night. The track was not to the liking of any of the runners, as it was not built for the purpose. It was merely the cinder foundation of the riding club floor with the tanbark scraped aside. The turns were slippery, and the time of all of the running events was slow.

D. C. Kinsey of the Chicago A. A. tied the world's record in the final heat of the 60-yard high hurdles with time of 7.5s., defeating D. M. Cooper 2s, of University of Michigan, and C. D. Werner of the I. A. C., and other fast timber hurdlers.

Another upset was the victory of A. B. Burg of the C. A. A. over H. M. Osborn could go. E. E. Myers of the C. A. B. Burg of the C. A. A. over H. M. Osborn could go. E. E. Myers of the C. A. A. won the pole vault with a mark of 13ft.

Thu & Adventure of the White Mice

I am sure you have heard some short story or word of the folks at the head of the pond. Where Farmer's Wife Mitchin, who lives in the kitchen, Has three small white mice who are folk.

He thought it a joke to take three little folk. hough they like to stay in, when the clouds make a din.

And there's something that sounds like a storm.

a storm.

Well, it happened one day, with their mother away.

That they slipped out and went for a walk.

Down the bank of the pond, and away off beyond.

For they wanted to have a good talk. Now, Pinky and Smart, you could not tell apart;
They were like as two peas to each other;
But the third I've heard say, was some bigger, and they Always called him their little "Big Brother."

Well, onward they walked, while they laughed and they talked.

For with fun they were surely just bursting;

While a something inside which would not be denied turesome prank was quite quickly sby as moving in sight, As they came to a nook in the bank where the brook Tumbled into the pond in delight, Called out in high glee—and they stopped, the whole three—

"Why, there's Musky, our coustn—he might might Take us home to his nest for the day for a rest,

And then bring us all back safe at night!" So, calling right out, with a lusty mouse shout,
They ran down to the water to see
If Muskrat, their friend, would be willing to lend
Them his back for a ride on the sea.

Of course, Musky agreed, and they mounted with speed.
On his back as he swam close to land;
And nothing could measure their shiver of pleasure—
Such swimming was perfectly grand. They were now almost there, and with courteous care, Musky turned to them quickly and said: "Hold your breath and don't fear, for I go under here."

And went down with a dip of his head.

They were none of them scared, but were not quite prepared.
So, when Musky dived under the stream,
He left them on top, where they shought best to stop,
And they each gave a little mousestruck out with vim, so they struck out with vim, hough they thought that their trip was in vain; friend Musky returned just as soon as he learned hey had stopped, and said, "Try it again."

So they clung to his fur, just as burr sticks to burr.

And he carried them under and through.

To his home underground, where warm welcome was found

In a world that was wondrous and Quite a big house, they found, was this home underground, Where Friend Musky had lived for so And his water supply was so very close by That no single thing ever went wrong on came, and while they

The afternoon came, and while they played a game,
Mr. Musky lay down for a nap;
When young Pinky's quick ear caught from somewhere quite near
A loud, unmistakable rap. They sat up and listened, while every eye glistened.
Alert with bewiderment funny.
Till Pinky said, slow, with mouse wisdom functions are with the said.
"I know just what it is, it's a bunny."

And they surely were right, his idea was quite bright— After searching about and some telling. After searching about and some telling,
They found a small hole, that ran out 'neath a knoll,
To a warren where rabbits were dwelling.

And here they all played, in the sun or the shade,
Or they hid out of sight in the clover;
Young bunnies so small jumping over them all,
Or rolling them over and over.

But of home they were fond, so went down to the pond When the evening began to close in,

To thank Musky for all he had done:
For all they had seen, and how happy they'd been,
And his share in their venturesome fun.

PACIFIC MESSAGE SENT BY BENITO MUSSOLINI

BY WIRELESS TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITO MADRID-"Tell all the Spanish journalists that Fascist Italy desire peace" was the message brought from Benito Mussolini by Signor Marinetti, an Italian notability who has just landed in Barcelona. "It would be folly to wish for war at this moment, when our moral grandeur is growing stronger as well as our finances and industries," the message continued.
"When France, Spain and Italy sign a frank, loyal peace pact, peace will be assured in Europe."

Belfast Yards Expected to Get Full Share of New Construction

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-The time is drawing very near when a definite pronouncement may be made by one of the two great shipping companies in the ountry regarding the prammoth paslenger liner, or liners, which each of them is, without doubt, about to build. Opinion inclines to the belief that the White Star will be the first to get away with their ship, and, following statements which have been made on semiofficial authority, the Cunard may build two such ships instead of one, as had been anticipated. In this event interest in the various shipbuilding centers will once more

In this event interest in the various shipbullding centers will once more be keyed up with the possibility of a contract which might easily run up to £5,000,000.

Hitherto in all the discussions it has been regarded as a foregone conclusion that the White Star liner will be built by Harland & Wolff at Belfast, and there is little possibility of the business going elsewhere in view of the close directorial connection between the two companies—closer, in fact, than it was in the old days with Lord Pirrie as a director of both concerns.

It has generally been assumed that the Cunarder would be built on either the Clyde or the Tyne, and the popu-lar theory has been that, all things considered, the Clyde would get the business. In this event the builders of the Aquitania have been suggested as the most likely to handle the new ship. With, however, the possibility of a second ship, all sorts of offers have come forward for building the vessel, and the claims of the Mersey, where Cammell Laird have their shipyard, have been actively can-vassed, especially on the sentimental grounds that a Liverpool-owned ship should be built on Liverpool's waterway. While no business man would suggest that sentimental reasons should weigh heavily in the deci-sion, the fact that Cammell Laird could build the ship has stirred some other shipbuilders to have the whole ituation revised, and what looked like almost a foregone conclusion a month or so ago has become one of the most perplexing problems in the shipbuilding centers.

The task of building big ships such as these is an enormous one, and the foregones district would soon.

such as these is an enormous one, and the fortunate district would soon find itself the mecca of the unemployed shipyard workers and of the host of crafts and trades which would be concerned with the construction of a vessel of this character. Certainly the building of two or three such ships at one time would give a great fillip to the industry, because the high-class work and the specialized nature of the equipment would demand the services of the most highly skilled craftsmen for a long time.

Pointer and 'Possum

Hopkinsville, Ky. Special Correspondence OME friends of the B- family recently caught a young opossum in the woods, and the little fellow was confined in a box in the garage, with every prospect of eventually decorating a platter along with roasted sweet potatoes. But the friendly nature of the little captive so disarmed Mrs. B- that she ordered the wild creature released.

"Billy Possum" was quite satisfied with his warm quarters, however, and he slipped through a hole under the door and was found next day curled up in the box which had a short while before been his prison.

Now when night falls, "Billy" slips quietly out of his new home, foraging in the woods, and early each morning, if the family are awake and watching, he can be seen walking applicable up to the walking suspiciously up to the garage door—and suddenly making dash through the hole for his

a dash through the hole for his sanctuary.

But the surprising part about "Billy's" new home is that a pointer dox also occupies the garage. But the opossum has exhibited no fear of his companion, neither has the dog exhibited any resentment, beyond an occasional growl, which may, after all, only be a friendly communication. Pointer and 'possum appear to be fulfilling the prophecy of the lion and the lamb.

The Traffic Officer The Traffic Officer

MRS. I. S., writing from Vancouver,
B. C., tells of a significant display of good will at a street corner there on Christmas Eve. The traffic officer on duty was surrounded by a number of persons; when he was at last left alone, the writer observed a large pile of packages around his traffic sign. The pile grew, too, as passing motorists expressed their appreciation of duty faithfully performed.

The Blackest Sheep of the Flock

BY ALMOST unanimous agreement of the representatives of leading maritime and the representatives of leading maritime powers of the world the submarine is denominated the most lawless and the least humane of all the so-called instruments of national defense. The proposal to outlaw it by consent of all civilized nations, to which the United States, operating through Secretary Kellogg, has again agreed, challenges the serious consideration of every friendly country. The plan is so constructively progressive that no argument should be needed to convince even the advocates of preparedness for war—of whom there seems to be a gradually decreasing numbers of the property of the pro ber in most countries—that humanity would be better served by the continued banishment of this foe of civilization.

But there must be overcome, seemingly, the persistent fear that it is only as a nation adopts and equips itself in preparation for war with some device more terrible or more powerful as an engine of destruction than can be operated by some possibly unfriendly nation can it rest in partial assurance of industrial, commercial and political safety. Yet it is perfectly apparent that had the submarine never been invented and adapted to naval warfare, offensive or defensive, the lack of it, either in peace or in war would never be felt. Its abolition now. by an agreement forever outlawing it, would injure no one.

There is interposed, of course, the claim that some single nation, violating such an agreement, might be in an advantageous position in case of war if it chose to build and equip submarines secretly. It would seem impossible for any nation thus to defy its law-abiding neighbors. The penalty of such insubordination would be more humiliating than defeat in war. Such an agreement would automatically compel its own

It is interesting, as one observes the comments made following the announcement recently made by Secretary of State Kellogg that he approved the resolution introduced in the United States Congress by Representative Frothingham looking to the abolition of the submarine, to note the fact that with few exceptions—possibly only one—the countries chiefly interested would welcome such action. But doubt is expressed by some as to the possibility of reaching such an agreement in an international conference. There is the latent suspicion that an advantage is being sought by the more powerful nations over those equipped with smaller navies. In some way the theory has been accepted that the submarine is the effective weapon of defense and offense best adapted to the needs of the smaller powers.

Thus there is apprehended, in case the new American proposal is seriously considered, a re-currence of the difficulty encountered during the Washington Conference when the virtual abolition of the submarine as an offensive weapon in time of war was tentatively agreed to by Great Britain and the United States. France, as well as Holland and Italy, seems convinced that this particular form of craft is essential, in the absence of powerful fleets of larger boats, as a means of coastal defense. These nations do not controvert the arguments against the submarine advanced in Britain and America. But France, it would seem, is ready to go to any reasonable lengths in naval armament limitations provided these can be made to apply to all seagoing armaments. It is conceivable that an agreement, if finally reached, should embrace an adequate insurance of the integrity of these contracting nations against offensive warfare upon sea or land.

If Spanish, Why Not Portuguese?

WITH Brazil gradually establishing itself in the Western Hemisphere as one of its most progressive nations, the question of making the Portuguese language take its rightful place alongside Spanish in the romance departments of leading North American educa-tional institutions is being seriously considered as essential to the fuller development of the Pan-American idea.

It is true that in some of the American universities and colleges Portuguese is being taught to a certain extent, and one of the most recent institutions to add the study of this language to its romance department is the University of California. But as Spanish has found wide acceptance throughout the high school systems of the United States, so the advocates of Portuguese claim for it that its usefulness would also be fully established were it to become part of the curriculum of the lesser institutions of learning.

More than two-thirds of the Portuguesespeaking people live in Brazil, which, as a mat-ter of fact, is the largest Latin country in the world. Many of these 37,000,000 people have interests-principally of a business nature-that bind them to the United States through exports and imports. American capital to the extent of many millions of dollars is invested in that southern Republic. Trade is always more satisfactorily conducted where all parties to a transaction are familiar with the respective languages of the nationalities concerned. In contrast to Central America, which is exclusively Spanish American, South America is not so constituted, and Brazil was settled and colonized by the Portuguese. With a territory larger than the United States, exclusive of Alaska, Brazil occupies almost half of the southern continent. Immigration is continually adding to the population.

The value of Americans understanding Portuguese was seen during the World War when government employees at Washington attended courses at the George Washington University. It was found especially useful to the Department of Commerce, and the foreign service in general. Europe long ago learned that Portuguese as a language study was a necessity for the better business penetration of countries where this tongue prevailed. Portuguese is today spoken by more than 50,000,000 people. Besides those that live in Brazil, Africa has some 6,000,000 people who live under the Portuguese flag, while over 1,000,000 Portuguese-speaking people live in Asia, and another 1,000,000 under the flags of the United States and of Great Britain. Portugal itself has 6,000,000 people.

Aside from what may be gained in a commercial way from a knowledge of the Portuguese language, in a purely educational and cultural direction it opens wide the doors to an appreciation of a literature that the contract of tion of a literature that occupies a prominent place in the domain of letters. All things considered, therefore, the sponsors of Portuguese as a companion to Spanish would seem justified in asserting that their claim should not be delayed, since acquaintance with this language would indeed advance Pan-Americanism so as to make it all-inclusive in its intent and operations.

Eighteen Years of Achievement

TIGHTEEN years is not a long period in the experience of the average individual, and it is difficult to realize that the Boy Scouts of America have only been in operation for such a short span, when one calls to thought the remarkable achievements of that organization. For it is a part, and no small part, at that, of a movement which claims with unquestioned justification that, as a whole, it constitutes the greatest united effort on behalf of and by boys of which the world's history holds record.

Described as a secular effort to start lads between the ages of twelve and eighteen in the right direction, the Boy Scouts of America have a field of endeavor that is almost overwhelming in the vastness of its scope and its possibilities. Thus there is no wonder that in the course of its eighteen years it has attracted the favorable attention of presidents, governors and many others in high executive positions. It happens that during 1927 the Boy Scouts of America were afforded an unexampled opportunity in the four great disasters which befell the Nation to put their training to a test in the most practical manner. And they more than lived up to their reputation.

In his latest message to the Boy Scouts of America, Sir Robert Baden-Powell spoke of the fact that a leaven is gradually being formed of young men and women in all countries whose aim is to substitute service for self and to practice amity and co-operation with their neighbors, whether within or outside their own particular countries. "Our hope," he added, "is thus to form a spirit of good will, which is the first essential to the successful foundation of our proposition for peace, whether by disarmament, arbitration of the League, or by treaty." There are some who look askance at the future, and claim to see little but dark pictures in the offing. But with the younger generation being trained to this newer point of view, and with the foundations thus being laid, in the characters of thousands, of a larger outlook and a nobler vision of what is right, little apprehension need be felt regarding what is to come.

Dickens in Denmark

TRANGE though British customs, manners and idioms may be to the Danish people, they have not prevented them from reveling in the works of Dickens. A noted actor, Svend Agerholm, has just finished a tour of the Danish provinces, where he gave a number of readings. Earlier in the season he arranged three "Dickens evenings" at the old "Three Harts" hostelry in Copenhagen. His preference apparently was for "Bleak House," portions of which he recited. It was from "Bleak House" that Bransby Williams, an English actor of note, drew one of his impressive characters, and few can forget his impersonation of Grandfather Smallweed. the veteran who was ever at war with himself.

Dickens had many points of contact with the Danes. His vivid imagination, revealed through his books, appealed to them. His characters had many interests common to other nations. His appeal to the human side of his readers touched a responsive chord. He was a friend of Hans Andersen, the children's fireside companion, and the pride of the Danes. Both had strong leanings toward the stage, and it was a disappointment to Hans at least that his dramatic efforts ended in failure. With such close associations it is not surprising that there should be something in the nature of a Dickens revival in Dickens' admirers will find a glow of satisfaction in the interest shown in the English author. It has been said that to appreciate Dickens people must read him when they are young. Most people first come in contact with him in the schoolroom. Yet there are many who have never had an opportunity to enjoy his books until the days of school have long passed. But none who have ever come to appreciate the real Dickens will fail to say of his works, as he himself has said somewhere: ". . . Keep my memory ever

Will Men Mine for Heat?

N SPAIN, recently, a ton of coal sold for $200. On the Witwatersrand of South Africa there is a gold mine whose lower galleries, 7000 feet underground, give off the heat equivalent of a ton of coal every half hour. In Tuscany men have driven pipes into the earth to tap reservoirs of volcanic steam which they have used to drive turbines producing 7500 kilowatts of electric power.

Putting these facts together and anticipating a not distant day when the householder may be asked to pay the Spanish price for coal, a British engineer has worked out detailed plans for mining the vast stores of heat known to reside in the earth. Basing his calculations on measurements made in various parts of Europe and America, which show that every mile of depth adds from 70 to 90 degrees, Fahrenheit, to the earth's temperature, he estimates that something like 400 degrees is to be expected five miles underground and at least 1500 at thirty miles. To bring up the heat from these depths, this engineer, John L. Hodgson, has devised two schemes which he recently described before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. The first is a development of the deep mines now known. The second contemplates something very like a man-made volcano, harnessed to supply heat and power. The plan is to sink a steel tube thirty miles into the earth. To offset the pressure at such a depth it would be filled with molten metal slightly heavier than the surrounding rock. Caused to circulate by an ingenious method, this metal stream would not only dig a path for the tube, but carry to the top the heat acquired at the bottom of the At the surface the heat would be applied to steam turbines and converted into

It is estimated that such a fountain of heat could be made to flow for $30,000,000—perhaps less if any valuable, possibly unknown, minerals were encountered—and that it would supply heat sufficient to generate 4000 horsepower. At present electricity can be obtained more cheaply from coal, but increasing treatment of coal as a chemical substance from which are derived essential oils, dyes, coke, tar, explosives, fertilizers and other ingredients demanded by industry, points to the time when its use as fuel will be wasteful. Our machine age is multiplying its power needs at an unprecedented pace. These requirements may be supplied by new processes for obtaining energy—or heat—from novel sources, from the air, the sun, the waves or tides. Mr. Hodgson's detailed plans turn thought to the possibilities beneath our feet.

For centuries coal lay about the earth unused, and 100 years ago mining of it in the United States went little beyond the loading of wagons at outcrops. So far men have scarcely begun to explore the earth. True, most of the globe's land and water surfaces have been charted, and the crust has been dented in spots. But the vast interior of the big ball remains a no-man's land, challenging a new type of pioneer to wrest from it known and unknown mineral riches, barely suspected treasures of heat and power.

Of Fading, or Flowering Interest

OLD pianos and new violins hold no high place, generally speaking, in the regard of musical people, pianos with the years losing quality of tone and violins wanting years to acquire it. Another difference, pianos are of their period, whereas violins are time-free. A piano of make of fifty years ago recalls in its sound the manners of the seventies; but a violin bearing date of 200 years ago speaks less for the people who lived in the eighteenth century than for those who flourish now, or who will occupy the chairs of recital halls afternoons and evenings to come. Wherefore the Chickering square, to name one example, tends to find lodgment in the auction room or the secondhand furniture shop, there to stand for sale for little: and the Steinway upright, to name another, tends to be trucked away to the factory for rehabilitation at the least cost that may be. The Stradivarius red and the Gasparo da Salò brown, on the contrary, reveal an affinity for the glass cases of museums, the strong vaults of wealthy collectors and the studios of great artists. They have a price.

It is a question of a fading, as against a flowering, interest. For in the common view, a piano begins to be a back number the moment it leaves the builder's hands; while a violin, a viola or a violoncello is a permanently unedited document, never having reached, and destined never to reach, publication. The common view of things is subject, however, to challenge; for to many persons, the loss which a piano suffers with use is, from the standpoint of quality, unimportant. The old wires in their iron frame have a vibration, and the old sounding-board over which they are stretched has a resonance, which delight, if they do not startle, listeners. The tone in which Chopin conceived his nocturnes and ballades, and in which Wagner worked out the harmonies of "Tristan and Isolde," can still, notwithstanding thinness, charm the sensitive ear.

In more familiar consideration, an instrument that was sonorous enough in a decade of Brussels carpets and lined window draperies to be a family boast, hardly ought, when floors are of oak and walls of cement, to be put out of doors because of its light voice. For record's sake, if for nothing else, the piano of broad lid and yellowing keys which takes up so much room in the house should be granted a while longer its corner; just as the recently made violin, which is all the ordinary player can own, should for promise's sake, be allowed on the concert platform and should be permitted there to discourse the masters.

"'Mancipation Ann"

WHAT are you doing, Anastasia?" I inquired wonderingly one bright February morning as I met my dusky helper at the head of the cellar stairway, her arms bulging with a promiscuous assortment of papers and bundles and her usually smiling face set in grave, determined lines.

"I'se 'done been rootin' through my passels, Mis' Elner," she explained as she deposited her treasures on the kitchen table, "fur a little ole flag that my gran'-mammy give me but I sin't spotted it yet."

mammy give me, but I ain't spotted it yet."

"What are you hunting a flag for?" I questioned curiously, "This isn't the Fourth of July or Washington's Birthday or—"

Anastasia regarded me with hushed surprise. "No ma'am, 't ain't neither o' them days," she admitted after a portentous pause, "but it's a mighty 'portant day, how-somever. Mis' Elner, you sholy knows this here's Mr. Lincum's birfday an' no mistake?"

Light dawned on me slowly. "Anastasia, I'd forgotten, there are so many special days—"

"'T ain't but onliest one day Mr. Lincum claims as his'n. There's that flag this very minute!" Anastasia cried delightedly, lifting a faded silk flag from its safe shelter in the well-whaleboned depths of an old silk bodice, "Mr. Lincum done give that little ole flag to my gran'mammy wif his own gracious hands."

"Why, Anastasia, it's a great treasure, if you're posi-

Anastasia nodded her carefully combed head, emphatically, while her eyes grew bright with memories.

"My ole gran'mammy on my pappy's side didn't come from Virginny, she lived with her white folks down on the eas'n sho' o' Mar'lan', an' far's I ever heerd tell, she war knowed all over ten states an' forty-leven counties as 'Mancipation Ann.'

I sat down in the kitchen rocker abruptly sensing a story of unusual interest. For awhile Anastasia stood stroking the diminutive flag while the light that shines in the eyes of all born story-tellers lighted up her face; even her soft, usually slow voice took on an unaccustomed note of speedy importance as she launched impressively into

"It war jus' bout the tail-end ob de war, Mis' Elner (the war Mr. Lee an' Mr. Grant fought an' Mr. Lincum done put a stop to fin'ly) an' time's war awful heavy ovah the Souf. My ole gran mammy, who was born an' raised right down on the eas'n sho', got ruminatin' in her min' bout all the cullod folks what was shippin' up to Balt'mo' an' gettin' big wages jes' cookin' vittles for folks what had money to throw 'way, Yankee folks, Mis' Elner. One mornin' her ole Marster say to her, 'Ann, you don't seem right happy, does you want to go 'way from yo' home?

"My gran'mammy war awful young then an' awful full o' nonsense an' seemed like she done fergot 'bout everything 'cep' them gole dollahs, an' she say, 'Yes, Mas' Josey, I reckon I hankers to tas' real freedom an' real wages jes' as soon as I kin.'

"Bout a week atter that, her Mas' Josey, he call her to him agin an' say as how he had wrote to a Jedge up in Balt'mo' who was goin' to give gran'mammy a job cookin' vittles for big money, seein' as how she war such a notorious cook. Upshot of it war that gran'mammy, all dressed up fine in a new bonnet an' shawl what her mistus give her, was drove to the wharf come Monday night an' put in care o' the capt'n o' the steamer." "Didn't she care at all about leaving her home and her people, Anastasia?" Anastasia shook her head, "No, ma'am, she didn't think bout home. All gran'mammy thinkin' bout war tham yaller dollahs up Balt'mo' way."

Anastasia paused, then went on in a low voice as if, even after so long a time had elapsed, she felt a sudden surge of shame for her ungrateful ancestor, "Gran'mammy had a pow'ful hard time learnin' new ways, learnin' how to cook in a big kitchen an' how to hole her sassy tongue when things didn't go jus' to suit her. Weeks pas', an' gran mammy done droopt like a caller lily what's tiad o' bloomin'. Everything war different. She didn't ever see the Jedge, an' the Mrs. Jedge didn't understan' her, but the gole dollahs come rollin' in every so ofen an' they all set a store by her cookin'.

"'Bout the time her heart was gettin' terrible longin'like for home, Mrs. Jedge sent fo' her one day an' say as how there was to be a big ball an' a supper befo' han', an' Mr. Lincum an' his wife was to be the honered guestes. Gran'mammy set her ears back like a racehoss then, an' la. me. but she cooked a supper-!! 4 4 4

"It war jus' befo' supper time when they strolled in the garden that the Jedge an' Mr. Lincum come by the kitchen do' an' gran'mammy set there wif tears runnin' down her cheeks beatin' up sass' fo' the puddin'. Gran'mammy couldn't help cryin', 'cause there war a blush-rose bush a-bloomin' in the garden zactly like the one she used to love down home.

"Mr. Lincum stopped an' spoke to her, an' she jumped up straight an' curtzed, but he jes' kep' on axin' her to tell him what war wrong. Gran'mammy say fo' so homely a man he had the mos' beautifulest smile she ever set two eyes on. Fust thing she knowed, gran'mammy blurted it all out 'bout hankerin' so hard fo' her own folks that she didn't care no mo' fo' the gole dollahs. What you think Mr. Lincum done?"

I shook my head slightly, not wishing to interrupt the tender little story.
"He took this here little flag out o' his pocket an' he say, 'Ann, I 'spects yo' love yo' own folks what reared you an' cared fo' you, an' I knows as how the Jedge here will sen' you home to them. This little flag is one I like to carry, but I'm goin' to giv' it to you to remin' you that freedom don't mean shirkin' yo' job or bein' ungrateful. I reckon you'll recall that every time you looks at it."

"Did she go home, Anastasia? Do tell me that."

"She'd a flew home, Mis' Elner, if she'd only knowed how. As it was the cap'n mos' los' his chart tryin' to keep her quiet while that little ole boat steamed down the bay. It war crossin' the Ches'peake Bay that gran'mammy hushed up a riot. Seems like yes'day I set down by our ole h'arth an' listened to her tellin' 'bout it for the sebenhund'eth time. I kin hear the win' now blowin' through our gum trees, an' the sleet beatin' a tune on our winderour gum trees, an' the sleet beatin' a tune on our wir panes, an' gran'mammy sittin' thar picturin' it all fo'

"But the riot, Anastasia," I interrupted, "do tell about the riot."

"Well," Anastasia began, looking past me (and through me as well, I often felt) with her familiar "back-to-Virginia" stare, "as I was sayin', gran'mammy war settin' in the lower cabin, all huddled up in a split-bottomed chair, when a culled boy run up from the engine room, jus' as he was, without no coat nor nothin', an' shoutin' all the time bout how culled folks was 'mancipated an' didn't have to work for no ole marsters; how he claimed his freedom an' coaxed all the culled folks on bo'd ship to jine him in enjoyin' it.

"Fust thing you knows he had a crowd 'roun' him so black you couldn't see his yaller face, an' he war a rantin' an' ravin' 'bout bein' a free cit'zen, thanks to 'good ole Abe.' It would a been safe fo' him, I reckon, if he hadn't said that, even though he kep' blamin' Mr. Lincum for sayin' things he never said. That boy war goin' full tilt when a little bit o' cyclone in shape o' my gran'mammy jumped up on a red plush sofy an' started wavin' this here little flag an' tellin' those cullod folks what war clen flabbergasted bout Mr. Lincum givin' it to her 'long with flabbergasted bout Mr. Lincum givin' it to her long with his good advice.

"That there light boy hadn't no chance after that. Gran'mammy, she tole 'em all: 'bout how she set out fer gole dollahs, an' how she et her h'art out hankerin' fo' home. La, gran'mammy talked the wool right offen their eyes an' woun' up the rav'fins, an' that bright boy sneaked back to the engine room plum shut up fo' a time.
Gran'mammy, she strut 'bout that lower cabin lis'ing to folks braggin' 'bout how she war the woman what talked to Mr. Lincum, an' all the time that old boat war pushin' right on home. That's how come they started callin' gran'mammy 'Mancipation Ann,' Mis' Elner, cause she never did leave off talkin' bout Mr. Lincum."

"How did you get the flag, Anastasia?" A broad smile broke over Anastasia's face: "Reckon cause I war the onliest one what never tiad o' listening bout it all. Gran'mammy could brag to me 'til she got her fill o' braggin', an' I war fresh to start out the nex' mornin'. Guess she knew I'd take care of the flag same as she did, Mis' Elner. I keeps it right in her bes' silk basque with the rose o' sharons done in steel beads down the fronts. It belonged to her lady 'fore gran'mammy saw it on herself; but I ain't finished my story.

"Early in the mornin' when the boat docked gran'mammy war the fust one off. La, how good the little town looked to her! She say it war paradise compa'ed to Balt'mo'. Every white house seemed to smile at her as she hurried up the street. Gran'mammy say she war so happy she could hardly keep her har't from bustin' into song. After bit, she see her own home. Gran-mammy say no streets o' gole ever could look half so elegant as them ovstershell paths in her ole marster's

"Fust she thought nebody war up, but soon she heard her Mas' Josey's steps an' she couldn't go no further fo' plain joy. Gran'mammy set there on the po'ch step an' Mas' Josey, he opened up all the shutters an' sta'ted down to the garden an' he spied grean'mammy settin' there. 'Ann,' he say, 'you Ann, what you doin' here? You ain't done nuthin' you oughten' to up in Balt'mo'?' Gran'mammy say she couldn't bear no mo', so she jus' laid her haid down on Mas' Josey's big shiny boots an' begged him to take her back."

"I should think he would have been glad enough to have her," I declared indignantly.

4 4 Anastasia shook her head. "He felt like she hadn't treated the Jedge jus' right, Mis' Elner. Upshot of it all mistus felt about it, an' gran'mammy went up the stairs to where her Mis' Lizy Anne war a-lyin' in her big fo' poster bed thinkin' 'bout stirrin' fo' the day. mammy jes' pushed the do' awfu' meek-like, but her lady spied her. Mis' Elner, she jus' hole out her two arms to gran'mammy, an' gran'mammy she jus' run right into

"Atter a long while gran'mammy riz up an' dove down in her skirt pocket an' brought out twenty-eight dollahs, all in shinin gole, an' rolled 'em out on the log-cabin quilt. Gran'mammy say it war a pow'fu' han'some quilt. 'That's fo' anything you say, Mis' Lizy Anne,' she declar', 'but don' let me never set eyes on it—never. Why, honey,' gran'mammy say, 'with all that style, they didn't even own a spidah in that Balt'mo' kitchen!'"

"A spider, Anastasia?" "You'all calls 'em fryin' pans an' skillets, Mis' Elner." Anastasia explained, "but that's 'cause you don' know no better, but down on the eas'n sho', an' down in Virginny, quality calls 'em spidahs, like they is.

"What are you going to do with the flag?" I ques-

"I'se goin' to put it right here where I can see it all day long an' ruminate 'bout Mr. Lincum. Pity I can't spen' one day in the whole year thinkin' bout him when he war so kin' to my gran'mammy. Every time I looks at it, I says, 'Little ole flag, you-all spells freedom fo' black folks, but you don't spell ungrateful h'arts. I sure am obliged to Mr. Lincum fo' learnin' my gran'mammy that—so's she could turn 'roun' an' learn it to me!"

Ten Tested Rules for Executives

T AM Resolved-

1. To remember that this my task is God's work more than mine, and that He is more interested in it than I am. To keep silent about my own feelings, experiences, and opinions. Much talking about these things weakens one's position. 3. To hold steady under a strain. Nothing is as bad as it looks. An orderly plan and a definite goal may clear away much confusion.

4. To hear both sides and take counsel before deciding large matters. Every man has something to teach me.

5. To leave important decisions until morning. God will meanwhile take a hand if I hold off a little. 6. To treat every man as my equal. Those who feel themselves below me will respond with new values; and those who seem above me are also timid. 7. To believe that every man intends to play fair. Better be imposed upon occasionally than suspicious all the time. 8. To give to my associates not orders, but responsi-

9. To remember that no case is hopeless, and to give to every man who fails at least three trials under varying conditions. It may be a matter of finding his place.

10. Having done all things, to decide, and having decided, not to change without good reason.—George S. Miller, in the Christian Advocate.

Clear as Mud

AT Kelly Field the students are advised that before they can be qualified as aviation pilots they must indicate that they have inherent flying ability. Most of the students don't know what it is yet, but they know that Lindy has it.

Thank You, Mr. Editor

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, the only paper in its class published in the United States, so far as is known to the Herald, is different in every way. Copies of the daily have been reaching this office as printed for several weeks and its columns scanned with interest. It is made up of not less than sixteen pages and has an advertising patronage from every state in the Union. It is not a local publication by any means, but contains daily articles and editorials of the upbuilding kind from almost everywhere. In the copies reaching this office not a murder, suicide or anything along the crime line is found in its columns.

It is published at Boston, Mass., at five cents a copy.

Families, and especially families with children, can make no mistake by having this clean paper come into their home regularly.—New Braunfels (Tex.) Herald.

Give Them Good to Copy

IT IS rather discouraging to read the list of murders and kidnapings compiled the other day by the United Press. . . It seems as if these acts were in some way contagious. And yet, if you care to stop and think about it, there is another side to it.

May it not be possible, after all, that a strikingly good deed also would find imitators everywhere? Isn't there a chance that a truly unselfish, humanitarian act would prove even more contagious?

We believe it would. We believe that the distressing features that mar our culture exist not because of any lack of goodness in the hearts of the average man and woman, but simply because we lack leaders who will sound the right chord.—Cleveland Press.
